

Inclusive Futures in Kenya

Who we are and what we do

About Inclusive Futures

Inclusive Futures brings together the expertise in disability and development from specialists and global leaders at 16 international organisations. The six-year initiative is funded by UK aid and is working in Bangladesh, Jordan, Kenya, Nigeria, Nepal, Tanzania and Uganda with public and private sectors, people with disabilities, and the organisations representing them. People with disabilities are at the heart of the approach and our projects ensure their voices are heard every step of the way.

Kenya

In Kenya, Inclusive Futures focuses on employment opportunities for people with disabilities, inclusive education, and support for microenterprises during COVID-19. We partner with employers to get young jobseekers with disabilities into training and support self-employed people with disabilities to scale up their local business. We work with Kenyan schools to introduce inclusive practices and get more children with disabilities into early education. In response to the COVID-19 pandemic, a new project has supported people with disabilities to reduce the impact on their businesses, and we are working with partners in the private sector and ministry departments to encourage a disability-inclusive approach to supporting microenterprises during the crisis and recovery.

Our aims

Our goal is to see a future that is disability-inclusive, where people with disabilities are afforded the same opportunities to access quality health care, education and find meaningful employment without fear of stigma or discrimination. We're also working to build back from the COVID-19 pandemic in a disability-inclusive way, addressing both the urgent needs of people with disabilities during the crisis and ensuring the response takes disability into consideration. Over the six years, Inclusive Futures will pilot innovative new ideas and generate research, evidence and learning into disability-inclusive development in order to make lasting change.

There are one billion people with disabilities globally, 800 million of whom live in low and middle income countries
